Russia.
Russia is not out of the war. This is the reassuring word given by Premier Kerensky in an interview at Petrograd, printed in The Star today. The vision of a separate peace between Russia and Germany raised by the incomplete printing of Kerensky's statement is dispelled by the full text. Russia is still in the war, somewhat worn by the strain of fighting the foreign foe and compassing a revolution unparalleled in history, but nevertheless a factor for Germany's discomfiture and ultimate defeat.
Russia has undoubtedly been a serious disappointment to the entente in this war. Yet the causes of her failure at critical times to deliver the blows which her size and resources justified her allies in expecting have been due not to any lack of spirit on the part of her people, but to treachery within, to incompetence at the head of the state and corruption among officials seduced by German influences. The revolution itself resulted from a popular reaction against these manifestations of faithlessness.
Had Russia pressed on continuously from the beginning with the full force of which she was physically capable, with her armies fully supplied and her leaders true to the cause, Germany would probably have been beaten in the first year of the conflict. It is true, as Kerensky says, that Russia's initial activity in the field saved France and England. Had Germany not been menaced by the formidable Russian sweep into East Prussia and Silesia she could have concentrated her forces in the west to crush the allied opposition there. Yet it must be remembered that it was Russia's own initiative in mobilizing against the German and Austrian threat, as a measure of policy to save Serbia from Teutonic aggression, that brought first France and then England into the war.
These are matters for the historians to consider. The question of immediate urgency is whether Russia will remain a factor in the war, upon which Germany must count as weighing against her success in the field. So long as there is no separate peace, and while Russia maintains armies in the field, there can be no relaxation of German and Austrian vigilance on the eastern front. That Russia, reinvigorated by months of comparative release from the actual strain of fighting, will eventually strike hard and inflict a damaging blow upon the enemy is to be expected. The Russian people cannot expect from Germany any thing but relentless aggression. A separate peace, perhaps bought by corrupt means, would not avail the Russians. It would be a deadly bargain, and the most hopeful sign of the time is that apparently the rapidly awakening people of the new republic appreciate the fact and are determined not to traffic with a foe whose treachery is now the reproach of the entire anti-Teutonic world.

Sedition and Bogus Socialism.
Significant in its bearing upon the existence of disloyalty sentiment in this country is the statement recorded in the news columns that the sudden and marked accession of socialistic political strength is due to the support being tendered socialist candidates for office by German sympathizers and well-wishers of the kaiser who are thus expressing their protest against the continuance of the United States in the war. The platform of these made-in-Germany socialists distinctly advocates immediate peace and discontinuance of war preparations. It is being daily repudiated by socialist leaders of approved genuineness of devotion to the principles of socialism as a political issue. They pass up political discussion of the war while the United States is in the war.
It is asserted with positiveness that much of the increased ostensibly socialistic support can be traced in some sections directly to quarters of German-descended population. The suggestion is made that the Department of Justice, charged with the duty of repressing disloyal expressions, may well inquire whether there is a pro-German directing force back of the alleged drifting of the pro-Germans to the socialist ticket. If it should be developed that these were the case the result would be illuminating, but without practical effect. The seriousness of the menace of this situation lies in the fact that a voter cannot be punished for supporting the socialist party as a political organization, even though his motive be to express his disapproval of the government's course. It is a distinct development in political possibilities in this country, although Russia has paid the penalty of German intrigue through the radical socialists in the undermining of her national effectiveness. Today's cable dispatches refer to similar propaganda in Italy, with the people there, however, awake to the situation and now charging some of the country's present distress to it.

Theater Crowding.
Assuredly if there is overcrowding at any place of public entertainment, whether movie house or theater, it should be stopped by the police, as Commissioner Gardiner says. Supposedly the rules against dangerous filling of the aisles and spaces behind the seats have been enforced. If there has been any relaxation in the vigilance it is a matter calling for a living up of the agencies of supervision. Somewhat reassuring is the report of the fire marshal that on a recent round of inspection he found no violations of the rules requiring that the aisles and back spaces be kept clear. Whether it is desirable to compel the managers to keep the back spaces entirely free of standing patrons is a question. The sole reason for the rule against crowding is to insure means of quick, safe exit in case of fire. If the exits are immediately within range of the standing spectators at the rear of the house and can be instantly opened and used the presence of these persons behind the seats may not be deemed a source of danger. But if there is any serious question on the subject the first requirement of safety is to prohibit the admission of any people beyond the seating capacity.

A New England orchestra of German leadership is commanding some critical support for its unpatriotic refusal to play "The Star Spangled Banner." The old song may be a little short of classic ideals and a little beyond the powers of the average singer. But its words have patriotic warmth and until another and a better song arises spontaneously to take its place the people will demand respect for the sentiment it represents. In an emergency like the present contempt for the national anthem is contempt for the nation.

Washington's subscription to the liberty loan was worthy of a capital city, which, even though voteless, is looked to for the highest standards of citizenship.

Bennett and Roosevelt.
The republican candidate for mayor of New York has no chance of election, and may be last in Tuesday's polling. He insists, however, he is in the race to stay, and it is conceded that he will receive a vote of good size. If he does stay, and it appears by the record that the vote cast for him would, if cast for Mr. Mitchell, have accomplished the latter's re-election, what will be the effect on Mr. Bennett's political future?
He is a young man of ability and ambition, has means, and likes politics. He does not like Tammany—cannot, because as the republican candidate he subscribes to the proposition that Tammany should not be restored to power. And yet the situation has taken the turn where his candidacy is inuring to Tammany's benefit.

There is a case close at hand which Mr. Bennett should carefully and prayerfully consider. It is the case of Theodore Roosevelt. It is not analogous to his own, but contains points worth his ponder at this time.
After bolting in 1912 the Taft nomination—which he contended had been unfairly obtained over him—Mr. Roosevelt accepted an independent nomination for the presidency, and began a campaign for election. Naturally, his candidacy added greatly to the excitement and uncertainty of the campaign.
At the outset he may have thought it possible for him to win. He addressed large audiences, and created much enthusiasm. But as the campaign progressed, and especially as it neared the end, it was clear that if he ran the race out he would defeat the old party which had made him, and bring in the democratic party. He ran the race out, with that result.
Last year Mr. Roosevelt had repented of a part at least—the principal part—of his 1912 performance. The democratic party, which he had brought in, had pursued a course in office very repugnant to him, and he wanted it turned out. He wanted to lead the movement for that purpose, and sought the republican nomination for President. But his record confronted him, and leadership was denied him. He then fell in behind Mr. Hughes, and spoke for him.
If next Tuesday's mayoralty result shall show that Mr. Bennett was instrumental in the election of the Tammany candidate, he will be held responsible in part for Tammany's course in office, which is certain to be no more to his taste than had the course of the Wilson administration been to the taste of Mr. Roosevelt last year.

Shooting Stars.
BY PHILANDER JOHNSON.
Reading.
"All the reading we really need is found in the Bible and Shakespeare," said the man of rigid ideas.
"Yes," replied Farmer Cornstossel; "ceptin' when we have summer boarders around. Then we've simply got to take somethin' with a sportin' page into it."
A Valuable Pride.
"Is Mrs. Cumrox patriotic?"
"In a way. She is positively delighted to find how much more taxes she can afford to pay than other people."

A Winty Warning.
Oh, pretty snowbird, have a care
While hopping through the street!
For scanty grows the bill of fare,
And you are good to eat.
Biding His Time.
"How much is a chicken wuff?" inquired Mr. Erastus Pinkley.
"What do you care?" inquired the dealer. "You are raising chickens of your own."
"Yes. An' every night or so, I misses a chicken. It's ginter let it go on till de price rises a few mo' notches an' den I's ginter make it a case of grand larceny."

Another Suggestion.
"I hope there won't be any shortage of fuel."
"So do I," returned Miss Cayenne. "If there is, I am going to suggest that base ball be played the year round. Nobody seems to pay the slightest attention to the climate when he can stand out in the street and watch a score-board."
No Dodging.
Each citizen puts up his coin
To make the sum immense
Required for war which we must join
Regardless of expense.
Now must we vote without regret
The passing of the day
When you could smile and murmur, "Let
The other fellow pay."

At the close of the first Cleveland administration Col. Lamont returned to New York, and there was mention of his name in connection with the governor-
